OUR MISSION

The Chick Mission is a nonprofit organization fiercely dedicated to providing fertility preservation for women battling cancer. Founder Amanda Rice started The Chick Mission after battling cancer three times before her 40th birthday; she was also forced to fight her insurance provider who refused to cover the $20,000+ cost of egg freezing because she wasn't infertile "yet," even though she about to undergo cancer treatment that would jeopardize her fertility.

Born out of her own frustration and concern for other women's fertility futures, The Chick Mission provides Hope Grants to newly diagnosed cancer patients that fully cover the cost of access to fertility preservation ahead of life-saving cancer treatment. Simultaneously, The Chick Mission increases awareness and tackles the issue proactively through education and advocacy.

IMPACT IN THE WORKPLACE

Over the past few years, The Chick Mission has partnered with 20+ companies across sectors for our Candid Conversations series.

While providing the resources and expertise to make such programming straightforward and an easy lift for our partners, we recognize and celebrate the individuality of each audience and work to ensure all events are thoughtfully customized with them in mind. Regardless of the scale, format, and content, the goal of this series is to create supportive spaces that allow for transparency and "real talk" about the fertility challenges that women can face, whether or not they are navigating a cancer diagnosis.

We engage cancer survivors, fertility insurance providers, HR representatives, and our dedicated, skilled fertility partners in these conversations to help provide a variety of perspectives – medical, physical, financial, emotional, and more.

At the end of the day, we hope that everyone who participates in a Candid Conversation with The Chick Mission comes away better informed about their health and healthcare and empowered to advocate for themselves and other women.
